

Workshop:

Writing for Scholars

Course description: With a point of departure in a current writing project, the workshop will take participants systematically through the most problematic areas of scholarly writing. The focus is on the document level – audience, core argument and structure – rather than the sentence level. The workshop also covers giving and receiving feedback as well as how to develop good writing habits.

The workshop is given in two parts: the first two days will be lecture-based (with short exercises), and the second two days will be practical.

Part 1: 22-23 February 2018

Thursday 22 February

10:15-11:00: Introduction: What is academic writing, and what are the main challenges?

11:15-12:00: Audience: Who are you talking to?

Lunch

13:00-14:00: Research question: What do you really want to say?

14:15-15:00: Structure: How are you going to say it?

15:15-16:00 Giving and receiving feedback: Theory

Friday 23 February

10:15-11:00: Journals and layout: What journals want from you, tips for tables and figures

11:15-12:00: Presenting research: How to use oral presentation for feedback in writing

Lunch

13:00-14:30 Partner feedback: One-on-one feedback session with another participant

14:45-16:00 Writing habits: Getting words on paper

Part 2: 22-23 March 2018

Thursday 22 March

Each participant gives a short (5-minute) presentation of their paper, highlighting the current writing challenges they are facing, followed by feedback from both the group and the facilitator.

Friday 23 March

This intensive structured writing session gives participants an opportunity to work on their papers, incorporating the feedback they received from the presentation session.

10:00-10:15:	Prepare workspace
10:15-11:00	Write
Break
11:15-12:00	Write
Lunch
13:00-13:45	Write
Break
14:00-14:45	Writing your "kappa"
Break
15:00-15:45	Writing research proposals
15:45-16:00	Wrap-up